SUNNYVALE, Calif. --- March 25, 2004 --- Capcom, a leading worldwide developer and publisher of video games, today announced that they are publishing games using QUALCOMM's BREW™ solution for delivery to a broad range of mobile devices. A product of QUALCOMM Internet Services (QIS), BREW is focused on next-generation wireless applications and services that will combine data and voice capabilities to better suit consumer needs in a converged wireless-Internet world. The first installment of games to be available includes four of Capcom's blockbuster titles: Mega Man, 1942, Commando and Ghosts N Goblins. These titles are scheduled to be available to consumers with BREW-enabled devices this spring.

"The BREW system allows Capcom to quickly bring high quality mobile adaptations of our best-selling titles to the global mobile gaming community," said Todd Thorson, director of marketing, Capcom Entertainment. Wireless customers will soon have the opportunity to play classic Capcom classic games that redefined their genres and the videogame industry as a whole. These games include:

- 1942 - Propel yourself back to World War II as gamers assume the control of a WWII era plane over land, sea and air engaging in challenging high flying battles.
- Commando - Fight as a highly trained soldier to annihilate the enemy and rescue captives that are behind opposing battle lines. Destroy the impenetrable enemy bases, and bypass obstacles using grenades and a machine gun.

- Ghosts N Goblins - Follow a noble knight named Arthur who journeys through haunted lands in his quest to rescue his fair maiden Guinevere who was kidnapped by the demon of Hades. Players will use spears, swords, axes, crosses and torches to fight against an onslaught of enemy zombies, ghosts and goblins -- all the while staying fully clad in armor, as enemy hits can bring Arthur down to his underwear.
